Dear employees,

Attached is the press release issued jointly today by Intel Corporation and Mobileye NV announcing a definitive agreement approved by the boards of directors of the two companies pursuant to which Intel will acquire Mobileye. Although the press release is detailed, and we recommend you read it carefully, we thought we would provide some insight on the proposed transaction.

First, we would like to apologize for springing this on you out of the clear blue sky – as a public company we are bound by securities laws that prevented us from talking about this transaction to most of our employees until today. Second, in the coming days, you will see headlines about this “$15B acquisition,” and those headlines are technically correct, but there is much more than the numbers to the proposed transaction.

The transaction is unique in the sense that instead of Mobileye being integrated into Intel, Intel’s Automated Driving Group (ADG) will be integrated into Mobileye. Intel’s automotive activity, which is concentrated in the ADG today, has a sizable number of employees. The Group will form part of Mobileye and be headquartered in Israel. Within the ADG are resident skill sets that are largely complementary to ours. For example, the ADG team includes systems engineers, simulators, mapping ingestion infrastructure and cloud computing with data centers, vehicle build engineers, and access to a pool of software engineers that will become part of our team. Combining forces will help accelerate our plans and lower our execution risks. We aim to become the leading team in autonomous driving. We want to make an impact on the world and this acquisition will enable us to accomplish that.

Amnon and I will continue running Mobileye just as we have done in the past. We will continue to do what we believe is best for our business, our goals and our long-term vision. Mobileye’s relationships with OEM customers, Tier 1 partners and STMicro, our EyeQ roadmap, and our after-market division operations continue uninterrupted. Mobileye’s name and brand will remain intact (but with some graphics changes to our logo, after the closing of the acquisition, to reflect the fact that substantial Intel resources would be integrated with and into Mobileye). Intel is not looking to have their people come in and run Mobileye – but that being said, there is much to learn from Intel’s experience, culture, expertise and resources in many fields tangential to our own and we plan to embrace this opportunity to learn and tap into their knowledge.

As we communicated in the past, 2016 was a transition year for Mobileye. It was a year in which we were propelled upwards from providing front-facing camera technology for ADAS to offering a value proposition that includes HD-mapping through crowd sourcing (REM), 360 degrees sensing and fusion, and Driving Policy. Mobileye identified three technological and logistical “pillars” to be mastered in order to accomplish our goals: sensing, mapping and driving policy. We made incredible technological progress and, more important, made progress in establishing partnerships (i.e., BMW, Delphi, HERE) and entering into data collection and sharing agreements for REM with VW and BMW (with more expected). We transformed Mobileye from a supplier to a partner – a highly valued partner – to OEMs and Tier 1s. Naturally, this transition introduces execution risks as we need to master new skills yet the window of time for meeting our objectives is very limited given the competitive environment and that new players are attempting to enter the market. The transaction with Intel provides a huge opportunity to leverage each other’s strengths and move faster towards our long term vision.

As the transaction is subject to regulatory approvals and other closing conditions, the acquisition will likely not close until the end of calendar 2017. For now and until the close of the transaction, it will be business as usual. In connection with the transaction, we anticipate integration planning efforts. After we undertake an in-depth study of the resources available from Intel, we will need to undergo an integration that will significantly increase the size of our company in a short time. We will also need to extend our operations over multiple sites in Israel and the United States.

Over the course of the coming days, we will host a gathering to discuss the proposed transaction and answer questions. Tomorrow, we will welcome Intel’s CEO Brian Krzanich who will also meet with you.

All in all, an interesting journey is ahead. We always wanted to change the world – now we have better means of doing so.

Ziv & Amnon
